Q & A with senior Spartan track and field standout

After such a successful indoor season, what has been your mindset throughout the outdoor season? My mindset has been to just leave a lasting mark on the program. I want to make the most out of my last outdoor season and my last collegiate meet in my career. How excited are you to be able to don the Green and White one last time as you vie for a National Championship in the triple jump? This is my last one, this is what I have been what I have working towards all season. Coming to Michigan State has just been a great opportunity. Right now I am trying to live in

help you in preparing for this one? The first time I went to nationals I was blown away by the environment and the athletes there. I was more nervous and worried about the competition, rather than what I needed to do. Now, having been there before, I can take it as a normal meet and give it all I got. With you being the lone senior in the group of six Spartans traveling to NCAAs, what does this say about the future of the Michigan State track & field program knowing there are so many up-and-coming individuals? The future looks bright here at

MSU. Where we were at when I came in, to where we are now, is a huge difference. There has been a complete turnaround with the Spartans. I look forward to seeing more Green and White at the NCAA Championships for many years to come. After sweeping triple jump action in the Big Ten this season, do you feel there is any added pressure going into the NCAA Championships? Not anymore added pressure from outside sources, just added pressure on myself. With this being my last go at it, I want to make the most out of the opportunity as it will be my last time stepping on the runway and putting on this jersey.
